

Internet Safety: Tips for Parents

Keep Internet use visible. Set up your computer in a common room.

Establish rules. Talk about time limits, appropriate content, and who your children are allowed to correspond with online.

Communication is key. Talk with your children about their favorite online destinations, and encourage them to come to you if anything makes them uncomfortable.

Protect privacy. Children should never share their personal information online.

When in doubt, check it out. Check your computer's history to see what sites have been visited.

Funded by IMLS,
the Alaska
State Library
and the Alaska Library
Association

For more information, visit
www.akla.org/safety

Internet Safety: Tips for Parents

Keep Internet use visible. Set up your computer in a common room.

Establish rules. Talk about time limits, appropriate content, and who your children are allowed to correspond with online.

Communication is key. Talk with your children about their favorite online destinations, and encourage them to come to you if anything makes them uncomfortable.

Protect privacy. Children should never share their personal information online.

When in doubt, check it out. Check your computer's history to see what sites have been visited.

Funded by IMLS,
the Alaska
State Library
and the Alaska Library Association

For more information, visit
www.akla.org/safety

How do kids connect to the Internet?

Access is Everywhere!

Computers. At home, friends' houses, school, the local library, coffeehouses, and other wireless hot spots.

Cell phones. Most cell phones allow users to access the web, chat, and share pictures or video.

Video games. Some gaming consoles allow kids to compete against and chat with other players online.

Kids who want to go online will find a way to get there. Make sure you talk to your children about Internet safety!

*Funded by IMLS,
the Alaska
State Library
and the Alaska Library Association*

For more information, visit
www.akla.org/safety

How do kids connect to the Internet?

Access is Everywhere!

Computers. At home, friends' houses, school, the local library, coffeehouses, and other wireless hot spots.

Cell phones. Most cell phones allow users to access the web, chat, and share pictures or video.

Video games. Some gaming consoles allow kids to compete against and chat with other players online.

Kids who want to go online will find a way to get there. Make sure you talk to your children about Internet safety!

*Funded by IMLS,
the Alaska
State Library
and the Alaska Library Association*

For more information, visit
www.akla.org/safety